

Execution phase

Friday, March 14, 2014

By Akron Beacon Journal Editorial Board

John Kasich likes to “keep shaking things up,” as he reminded in his State of the State address last month. Nowhere in his administration has he been more successful in this cause than at the Governor’s Office of Health Transformation. Greg Moody, in collaboration with John McCarthy at Medicaid, have worked to upgrade the delivery of health care in the state.

They have applied the sound thinking: It isn’t enough to shake things up. You must turn the disruption into something better.

Tucked inside the mid-biennium review unveiled by the governor on Tuesday is a proposal to bring such an approach to another part of state government. The governor wants to create an Office of Human Services Innovation within the Department of Job and Family Services.

Article continued here: <http://www.ohio.com/editorial/execution-phase-part-2-1.473478>

###