West Shoreway conversion to boulevard with Lake Erie access gets funding, is set to begin in the spring

A decade-long push to link Cleveland's West Side to the lakefront has the final piece of funding to complete the project.

Cleveland Mayor Frank Jackson and Gov. John Kasich held a news conference today at Edgewater Park overlooking Lake Erie to announce $20 million in state funding to turn the Shoreway into a lower-speed, tree-lined boulevard. Construction on revamping the roadway is to start next spring.

From Dream to Reality: Lakefront West Project

From a dream to reality: Cleveland Mayor Frank Jackson joined with Ohio Governor John Kasich on Tuesday to talk about the Lakefront West Project.

Gov. Kasich announced that the state would be providing the necessary funding for the long-awaited project.

It will connect Cleveland's west side with the lakefront by creating connections along the West Shoreway between West Ave. and the Main Ave. Bridge.

Kasich to Jackson: Keep your 3 Million Dollars, It's Covered

At a press conference staged before the Cleveland cityscape, Kasich praised Jackson's efforts to build up the lakefront as a way to get jobs and tourism into full swing. He said Cleveland's main three projects have been the Inner Belt Bridge, the Opportunity Corridor, and the Shoreway project.

Kasich then said Ohio's Department of Transportation was in the top five nationwide for completing projects efficiently.
